Announcement of Non-Tenure Track Faculty Position in Kinesiology

The Department of Kinesiology at Temple University (cph.temple.edu/kinesiology), one of nine academic units in the College of Public Health, is recruiting a non-tenure track faculty member to teach in our undergraduate programs beginning August 17, 2015. Temple University is a Carnegie Research University (high), with more than 39,000 students and distinguished faculty in 17 schools and colleges. The University has an exceptionally strong commitment to quality teaching, research, and advising. The Department of Kinesiology, with approximately 1,300 students, has strong graduate and undergraduate degree programs. The undergraduate program in Kinesiology is the third largest in the University, and is comprised of programs of study in athletic training, exercise and sports science, PHETE (teacher education), and the pre-health professions (designed for students seeking graduate study in physical therapy, occupational therapy, physician assistant, medicine, nursing, podiatry, etc.).

We are looking for an enthusiastic, dedicated professional with a background in physical activity programming to coordinate the department’s Basic Instruction Program (BIP). The BIP is a university wide program offering physical activity courses in aquatics, team and individual sports, fitness, outdoor offerings, the martial arts, etc. In addition to coordinating BIP, it is expected that the faculty member would teach undergraduate courses in the department where appropriate. The ideal applicant will have a graduate degree in a related area, and a strong record of teaching at the undergraduate level is highly desirable. In addition, any specialty certifications will be beneficial. This appointment is from one week prior to the start of the fall semester (August 17, 2015) until the completion of the spring semester duties. The potential for contract renewal is on-going provided satisfactory execution of one’s duties is performed.
