Department of Kinesiology

Non-Tenure-Track Faculty Position in Anatomy and Physiology

The Department of Kinesiology at Temple University is recruiting a non-tenure track faculty member to teach anatomy and physiology in our undergraduate/graduate programs. The Department of Kinesiology (chpsw.temple.edu/kinesiology) has experienced rapid growth with approximately 1300 current students. The undergraduate program in Kinesiology is the third largest in the University and is comprised of programs in athletic training, exercise and sports science, PHETE (teacher education), and the pre-health professions (PHP). The PHP program is designed for students seeking graduate study in physical therapy, occupational therapy, physician assistant, medicine, nursing, podiatry, etc.

We are particularly interested in an enthusiastic, dedicated professional with a background in teaching anatomy and physiology. The candidate will participate in the development and delivery of coursework specific to anatomy and physiology, and may also teach courses in exercise science. The ideal applicant will have an earned doctorate in a related area, but doctoral candidates will be considered. A strong record of teaching at the undergraduate level is highly desirable as is experience in teaching online.

This is a 1.5-year appointment with potential for contract renewal. The start date is January 2015.

Applicants must submit their curriculum vitae, a statement of teaching background/philosophy, and the names of three individuals who can provide letters of recommendation, if requested.

All materials should be submitted to chpsw-search@temple.edu.

Temple University is an equal opportunity/affirmative action institution. People of color, women, veterans, and persons with disabilities are encouraged to apply.
