

IBC Foundation Healthcare Scholars Pipeline Program - Workshops for High School Students

Building on existing partnerships with area high schools, the Department of Nursing, in partnership with the Independence Blue Cross Foundation, will offer workshops for students from partner high schools that will help prepare them for success in nursing education at Temple University.

These workshops will utilize strategies demonstrated to advance academic success and goal attainment and promote student success in nursing programs.

Three-day summer program for freshmen rising to sophomores

This program will be held at Temple University and focus on safety and first aid, hygiene, healthy nutrition, stress management, and the role of nursing in the health of individuals, families and communities. Students will participate in a simulation activity focused on responding to a health emergency.

Three-day summer program for sophomores rising to juniors

This program will be held at Temple University and focus on hypertension, diabetes, self-care, stress management, and the role of nursing in the health of individuals, families and communities. Students will participate in a simulation activity focused on responding to a health crisis.

Three-day summer program for juniors rising to seniors

This program will be held at Temple University and focus on substance use disorders, domestic violence, STDs, mental health, and the role of nursing in the health of individuals, families and communities. Students will participate in a simulation activity focused on responding to an overdose and will learn to use Narcan and activate EMS.

Application workshop for juniors

The admissions office at Temple University will hold a workshop for junior high school students to help them craft strong applications.

Three-day hybrid program for seniors interested in nursing as a career

This program will be held at Temple University during winter break and incorporate curriculum to be used for subsequent summer camp programming as detailed above. The admissions office at Temple University will also provide additional support for participating seniors to help them craft strong applications. It is geared to all students interested in nursing but especially for those who would like to apply to Temple's BSN program.
