TEACHING EXPERIENCE

Courses Taught

Temple University (2017-present)

HRPR 1001 Public Health: How We Live Work and Play: F'17, S'18, F'18, S'19. 63 students each class. Required undergraduate-level survey course for College of Public majors designed to introduce students to the five core areas of public health and help them think about contemporary health issues from an interdisciplinary perspective. Taught in class using lecture, discussion, small group work, electronic games, and case studies. Students complete a group project of a written fact sheet and presentation for their final project on a Healthy People 2020 topic.

SBS 2216 Ethnicity, Culture, and Health: S' 19, F' 19, S' 20, F' 20, S' 21, F' 21. About 50-80 students per semester. Required undergraduate-level course. This course seeks to encourage students to critically examine how ethnicity and culture impacts health and explore the individual and structural factors that contribute to health disparities. Taught in class using lecture, discussion, small group work, and community observations. Students complete a group project and presentation of a neighborhood observation in a local community for their final project.

SBS 3104 Professional Seminar: S' 18. 17 students. Required undergraduate-level majors' course on professional development in preparation for the first internship, taught through lecture, discussion, small group activities, and self-reflection and professional development exercises. Students complete multiple professional projects including resume and LinkedIn page development, professional skills assessment, and a professional presentation.

SBS 3105 Fundamentals of Health Education: S' 21. 30 students. Required undergraduate-level majors' course that explores the science and art of teaching, with a focus on learning and applying various teaching methods and strategies and practicing these skills in a controlled environment. Content includes: the beginning skills of becoming an effective facilitator, teacher, and presenter of health education in a variety of settings; formulating goals and objectives; and planning, teaching, and evaluating lessons and instructional materials necessary for health education specialists. Students complete two major projects of developing and teaching a health education lesson plan for a major health topic targeted for a specific audience.

SBS 3185 Internship I: F' 17, F' 18, S' 20. 10-12 students per semester. Required undergraduate-level course of a practical experience that provides students an opportunity to apply the concepts, techniques, and theories learned in the classroom at various public health agencies in the Delaware Valley. Taught through oversight of activities and hours performed. Students complete 200 hours of fieldwork and an agency-specific assignment as their final project.

SBS 3496 and 3596 Community-based Health Program Planning: F' 17/S' 18, F' 19/S' 20, F' 20/S' 21, F' 21/S' 22. About 20 students each class per semester. Required undergraduate-level two-semester capstone writing intensive course that prepares BSPH majors in the development of all materials needed to plan, implement, and evaluate a public health intervention. Taught in class using lecture, discussion, small group activities, data collection and analysis, and fieldwork experiences. Students complete an individual final project of a full-scale grant proposal written to a fictitious foundation.

SBS 5001 Fundamentals of Public Health: F' 18, S' 19, F' 19, S' 20, F' 20, S' 21, Sum 21. About 15-25 students per semester. Required graduate-level survey course on the fundamentals of public health, taught in class using lecture, discussion, and small group activities. Students complete a research paper and an innovative oral presentation for their final project on a Healthy People 2020 topic.
